

This finest Blended Canarian Whiskey is made from a perfectly balanced blend of wheat and barley. It consists of 50% wheat and 25% unmalted barley, together with 15% malted barley and 10% malted wheat, all from the typical varieties most commonly grown on the islands, such as "barbilla" wheat (Triticum Aestivum) and "rabuda" or "plaganuda" barley (Hordeum Vulgare). It is matured in 225-litre oak casks in new European oak barrels (Quercus Robur, Quercus Petraea, Quercus Pyrenaica) from Hungarian, French and Spanish forests. The distillation is carried out in a copper column from the end of the 19th century with direct wood fire heating. We obtain a spirit with a lighter profile from unmalted grains, distilling to between 75-80% vol. and a slightly heavier profile in the case of the malts, between 60-65% vol., thus preserving all the character of the cereal, all its aroma and flavour, and maintaining a variety of intense smoky notes.

As a fundamental and final part, the product is reduced to bottling strength with water, an element of great importance in whiskey production. We use pure water from the natural aquifers of Marcos y Cordero on the island of La Palma.

We created the flavour profile of this whiskey to be close to Scotch, which is the preference of the Canary Islands market.
